

Bush's speech promises justice

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush cautioned a shaken nation Thursday that there are "struggles ahead and dangers to face" as America and its allies combat global terrorism. He announced a new Cabinet-level office to fortify homeland defenses.

Addressing a joint session of Congress nine days after suicide hijackers are believed to have killed more than 6,000 people at the Pentagon and World Trade Center, Bush clasped the badge of a slain policeman in his fist.

"I will not forget this wound to our country, or those who inflicted it. I will not yield. I will not rest," he said.

The Sept. 11 attacks had put the United States on notice that the world's only superpower was not immune to attack, Bush said. He named Pennsylvania Gov. Tom Ridge to head the new Office of Homeland Security. Ridge, a Republican, will resign Oct. 5, and will be replaced by Lt. Gov. Mark Schweiker, a GOP source said.

Using forceful terms, Bush delivered a verbal indictment against Osama bin Laden and demanded that Afghanistan's ruling Taliban militia surrender the suspected terrorist, release imprisoned Americans and give the United States full access to terrorist training camps.

These demands are not open to discussion, Bush said. "They will hand over the terrorists or they will share in their fate."

The commander in chief directed U.S. military forces to "be ready" for the gathering war: "The hour is coming when America will act and you will make us proud."

Bush asked every nation to take part, by contributing police forces, intelligence services and banking information.

With British Prime Minister Tony Blair watching from a House gallery seat at first lady Laura Bush's right arm, Bush said:

"The civilized world is rallying to America's side. They understand that if terror goes unpunished, their own cities, their own citizens may be next. Terror unanswered cannot only bring down buildings, it can threaten the stability of legitimate governments and we will not allow it."

Bush entered the House of Representatives chamber to a rousing applause — from Democrats and Republicans alike — that punctuated his remarks 30 times. Stepping from the massive rostrum, he wrapped Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle in a long and emotional embrace before turning to hug House Democratic leader Dick Gephardt, too.

"Tonight there is no opposition party," said Senate Minority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., standing beside Daschle, D-S.D., for a bipartisan broadcast afterward.

Unprecedented security shrouded Bush's visit to the Capitol one week after it was evacuated for the second time because of suspected threats.

Career Center offers job prospects

Some students on campus were treated to free pizza, ice cream, drinks and t-shirts: but there was a catch — they had to register first with the San Jose State University Career Center.

In an effort to inform students about the career center services, Spartajobs, in partnership with Monster.com and sponsors such as Pepsi One, United Parcel Service and Safeway held an open house behind the Student Union Amphitheater.

"We want to let students know about the benefits of becoming an online registered user," said Kara Winton, a career center consultant who helped organize the event.

Those benefits include, Winton said, not just a day with free food, but a wide range of services to help students with career related questions and needs.

The registration process required students to fill out a short questionnaire on the center's computers.

As a part of the open house, makeshift tents were set up along the walkway with computers attended by students.

Ricardo Baraza, junior in computer science said he hadn't planned on attending the event

Students receive scholarships

By Colin Atagi
DAILY STAFF WRITER

An awards ceremony was held Wednesday in honor of students who have received scholarships from their respective colleges.

The San Jose State University Alumni Association Deans' Scholarship Awards Ceremony took place in the University Room next to the Market Cafe.

The scholarships were awarded to two students who deans select from their respective college, based on an application progress during the last spring semester.

"We give out 17 scholarships, two per college, so there are eight different colleges in the university, and one for library and information sciences," said Fred Najjar, associate vice president of alumni affairs. "That totals 17 which is the single-largest scholarship program for alumni in the California State University system, which we're proud of."

Each student receives a scholarship of $1,250, Najjar said.

SJSU alumni program officer Holly Miller coordinated the event.

"It's special because it is acknowledging to students why they are students," she said.

Najjar provided the opening speech and acknowledged the alumni and board members in attendance.

Michael Ego, dean of the College of Applied Sciences and Arts, was the first to present a scholarship to his respective college.

Scholarships were awarded to graduate students Geoffrey di Brandi and Shoshannah Orzech.

Dean Gerald Selter of the College of Science awarded his scholarships to graduate student Halle Ruth Morrison and computer science major Abhinand Vase.

"I'm just so honored, I can't describe it any other way," Morrison said.

Morrison said she is going to continue teaching in Portola Valley.

Associate Dean Nancie Fimble of the College of Business awarded scholarships to Marcio de Andrade, an undergraduate majoring in finance.

The other scholarship for the College of Business went to Laura Marie Lamprecht, who was not in attendance.

Scholarships for the College of Humanities and the Arts were awarded to art major Sharon Needham and graduate student Scott Stroud.

"I think it's a real honor and I'm glad the Alumni Association allows the university to recognize us," Stroud said. "It's a real honor."

Stroud said he is currently finishing his master's program and

SJSU alumnus remembered

Dwayne O'Steen, a San Jose State University alumnus and former NFL player, died Saturday because of an apparent heart attack.

He was 46.

"He was a tremendous father figure with great family values and great ethics," said Sam Roberson of Fairfield, who was a close friend of O'Steen's. "He had a strong physical and vocal presence. Our city lost a great citizen."

O'Steen was raised in Los Angeles, where he attended Manual Arts High School before going to UC Berkeley in 1973.

In 1975, O'Steen transferred to SJSU where he was a starting safety for the football team in 1976-77.

He signed a free agent contract with the Los Angeles Rams in 1978, where he stayed for the 1978 and 1979 seasons, before moving to Oakland to play for the Raiders in 1980 and 1981.

O'Steen NFL career lasted seven years.

During that time he also played for the Baltimore Colts, Tampa Bay Buccaneers and Green Bay Packers.

He played in Super Bowl XIV for the Rams and was a part of the victorious Raiders in Super Bowl XV.

O'Steen retired from the sport in 1984 and began working as a salesman, selling medical equipment to cardiologists.

In 1990 he moved to Fairfield, California.

There he met former Fairfield mayor Chuck Hammond, while the two coached their sons' sports team.

Housing center open for business

By Colin Atagi
DAILY STAFF WRITER

The Housing Assistance Center held its grand opening on Wednesday to commemorate the center's new location and to inform students of its services.

San Jose State University students, staff and faculty members can visit the housing assistance center for help in finding off-campus and affordable housing.

The housing assistance center was around last semester, though it was located in Joe West Hall, Willey said.

The modular where the center is now located arrived last spring when it was decided it would make a good home for the center, Willey said.

"We realized we needed more space to be able to accommodate faculty and staff as well as training sessions for home-buying education," Willey said. "We moved in here towards the end of the summer and planned the grand opening back in July."

New computers can be found in the center for students to use in searching for homes.

"These computers are to showcase our off-campus housing Web site," said Diana Tran, interim community relations coordinator. "It's under the university housing service Web site. It offers rental listings, landlord listings, and buying guides."

The event was coordinated by assistant director for organization and planning Craig Elliott and associated director Sharon Willey.

"I'm really happy, actually," Elliott said. "This has been a two year process of just getting the housing center set up and trying to provide the resource and doing the research. So it's really exciting to stand here and see people coming in and wanting our services and the relationships we've made with local realtors and brokers. So I'm excited."

Some students said they are glad there is a service to help them find a place to live.

"It'll benefit everyone because if you're looking for an apartment or a house you can come inside and they'll help you look for one," said Andrea Scott, an undeclared junior.

Senior Akbar Shetty, president of the Inter Residence Hall Association and vice president of Associated Students, agreed.

"This is a great thing and I'm really glad university housing is being proactive in helping students, faculty and administration secure housing in the area," Shetty said. "It's just nice to see the university come down here and be a part of this. It's like a joint effort that doesn't just disappear."

To assist in the grand opening, real estate and financial firms from around the Bay Area attended to provide insight on their respective services.

"I think we have an array of products for students, no matter what their financial situation," said Duane Webb of USE Credit Union. "We used to have an office on campus and would love to have more (students to help)."

Other representatives had similar feelings.

"We're here to help (students, staff and faculty) because the programs we offer can in many ways specifically help each of those groups depending on their particular situation," said Suzie Krause of Cal Fed Lending. "We have a lot of good loan pro-

Flying flags show unity, patriotism

This is a thank-you note to all the students and faculty members who have been patriotically flying the American flag and other red, white and blue tributes this past week.

I've walked, driven around campus and seen many flags ribbons on car antennas, in windows, and even painted on backpacks.

I'm sure we all know that this does not directly aid the victims and families of this horrible tragedy, but it certainly makes me smile and fills me with pride to live in a country where so many have banded together to display our colors so proudly.

I'll be keeping mine in my car for a while along with everyone else. It truly gives meaning to the words: "United We Stand."

Controversial editorials, cartoons deserve a voice

What is the opinion page? Is it the place to publish the uncensored feelings of the editorial staff, or its readers?

Or is it the place to express politically correct images and text?

Tuesday evening, the offices of the University of California at Berkeley's student newspaper, The Daily Californian, were bum rushed by nearly 100 people who were angered by a cartoon that ran on the opinion page of that day's newspaper.

The drawing depicts two men with beards wearing robes and turbans while standing in the palm of what appears to be that of the devil.

One of the men has both fists clenched as he says, "We made it to Paradise. Now we will meet Allah, and be fed grapes and be serviced by 70 women, and..."

What would possess a person to sit down at a desk and start drawing such a thing?

I mean didn't the artist know that Muslims and Sikhs around the country were feeling the backlash of last week's attack on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon?

Didn't the newspaper know that the piece was a bit controversial and that many people would be against his views?

And if this is true, then why did the

ANNOYED

paper run it?

The answer is freedom of speech.

I'm sure some of you are fed up with this term and wish it would just go away because it allows too much freedom to newspapers and those who run them.

But I want you to sit back and think about the term.

It does not mean that we, as newspaper people, can do whatever we want.

Do you think that we put little effort and thought into these pages?

The opinion page is sacred. We give all of you the opportunity to express your views through letters to the editor. And we, as editors and staff writers, display our opinions through columns.

The opinion page is not a place where one has to choose which side he is on.

Hell, when I first saw the aforementioned cartoon, I too, was uncomfortable about seeing such images and thought that the staff of the Californian did a horrible job. But after taking a step back, I now see the theory behind it — it is one man and his opinion of what the terrorists might be dealing with now.

It was not an attack on a group of people.

Sure, the cartoon came at a bad time and could have used a little labeling and less generalization.

I mean what was the artist, Darrin Bell, thinking when he sat down to draw such a piece? What gave him the idea that the terrorists were wearing turbans and such?

It was a broad generalization of people of the Muslim faith.

Even now we see the pictures of these terrorists on TV and I don't recall any of them wearing turbans and robes.

Osama bin Laden wears a turban and robe, but that wasn't the guy in the airplane that hit the Pentagon. Nor was it the guy who was in the first or second plane that crashed into the World Trade Center.

And it wasn't the guy who was in the plane that crashed in Pennsylvania, which killed San Jose State University Alumnus Andrew Garcia and Jason Dahl.

The cartoon was the artist's rendition of what he thought the terrorists looked like; of course he could have used a little help in drawing the characters.

His view, however, was not distorted. The point to Bell's drawing was not that Muslims and Sikhs are the ones doing this, rather that those who did, did it in the name of their religion and that in his opinion, they are more than likely burning in hell.

Even with a letter of explanation from Bell, there are still those who want an apology.

And with tremendous pressure from those who were offended by cartoon, The Daily Californian has stood its ground and said that it will do no such thing.

While the drawing could have used a little prior explanation and a little labeling, I agree with the Californian, because it was indeed expressed on the editorial page.

These are the opinion pages. A place where one's voice can be heard by many.

A place where one can express his opinion on any given subject.

A place where the First Amendment rules and no one has to agree with you.

These are your opinion pages, don't decry them, use them.

Hard-learned lessons of driving recklessly

It would be redundant to talk of the dangers of alcohol since we have all learned what it can do. There are laws regarding the legal drinking age and there have been campaigns to educate kids about the consequences of drinking in excess.

Well, the truth is that there is that time when you go out, have a couple of drinks and thinking to yourself: I can drive. I am the most sober of all my friends and besides, calling a taxi seems like too much of a process.

So after you have rationalized your stupidity and have convinced yourself you have supernatural powers, you get in the driver's seat and open a Pandora's Box that looks similar to the rubik's cube used in "Hell Raiser". Yes, you have opened the doors of hell.

It was almost a year ago when I was doing an internship down south and I came to see my friend's stand-up comedy show in downtown San Jose.

After laughing for an hour at the show and having two beers (OK, they were the large ones, but still) I left the place and got in my car.

So I got on the road not knowing the night had other intentions for me. I had leftover Chinese food from that night in my car and after getting on 101 South, I started eating and driving at the same time. My car at the time, a 1981 Honda Civic, had long been needing its alignment fixed, which I neglected for lack of incentive.

As I scooped the first couple of bites into my mouth, I saw the red and blue lights taking over my rear view mirror.

I explained the alignment story and after I was done he asked me to please step out of the car. OK, I thought, I can pass the test, I will be on my way home with a fix-it ticket for an expired ID in less than an hour.

Ha! The traffic gods were probably rolling with laughter at my thoughts, what a wishful thinker. I passed my tests and the moment of truth finally came, the wicked breathalyzer.

I've heard there are many ways to fool this test, eat some mustard and it will take the alcohol breath away, put a penny under your tongue, the copper reacts in a "special" way with alcohol, don't blow too hard they'll never know. You know what I'm talking about. We have all heard the myths.

Since I did not have my jar of mustard handy, I blew and my alcohol level was on the limit, 0.08 percent of alcohol in my blood.

"Put your hands behind your back, on your knees, face to the floor, don't talk, cry or breath. You have entered the DUI kingdom of terror. There will be no mercy.

KARLA

"You will never in a million years wish this on your worse enemy."

After handcuffing me and throwing me in the back of the cop mobile, my whole life passed before my eyes. As I sat in the back seat, my shoulders about to dislocate and pop out of their sockets. Handcuffs are not fun. Try wearing them for forty minutes behind your back. Exactly, ouch. Then they take you to jail and put you in the drunken tank with a couple of more of your type.

That night has got to be by far the longest one in my life. The other two girls who were with me were so drunk I couldn't figure out how they walked to their car to attempt to drive.

The room is a square box. No one can hear on the outside when you start yelling at them in desperation because 11 hours have gone by and you are still there. You are only supposed to be in there for five hours.

There is a hole on the ground so you can go to the bathroom. Yeah right, "Um... girls do you mind closing your eyes real quick while I go pee, please?" It was so embarrassing, not to mention degrading. I regretted having gone out, having come to San Jose, having laughed all night, drinking the rest of that last beer, Reaction to my tragedy was along the lines of "Oh no, you are so dead, DUI's end up costing you a lot of money, you are looking at a couple of grand. But hey, don't worry about it, it could have been worse." Thanks.

Your license gets suspended and your insurance goes up, and this is only the tip of the iceberg. Fortunately, my case got reduced to a wet and reckless, which still costs about $1,400 dollars plus 12 hours of DUI classes. On top of that, I had to pay $100 to reinstate my license. If I get another DUI it will count on my record as two DUI's.

After all this, I look at drunk driving in a whole different way.

Then there are those who have two or three DUI's and you start to wonder if they are masochists.

No justification for attacks, regardless of U.S. foreign policy

Like the rest of the nation, students of San Jose State University groaned in unison for the tragedy on our soil, but not in agreement for the proper actions to take in response.

Students have formed differing ideas concerning a U.S. response to terrorism, as well as reasons the most recent tragedy took place.

Some have been slow to anger, and think that because we don't know exactly which terrorist group is responsible, we shouldn't retaliate.

At this point, however, it doesn't matter who did it. If they didn't do it this time what assurance do we have they won't do it in the future?

Is there some kind of gentlemanly code of ethics most terrorist groups follow, except for the really bad ones? You know, unethical terrorists?

The result of this attack is 5,000 people dead and mass destruction, with the death toll still rising.

That's an illustration of the primary goal of terrorism.

Therefore all terrorist endeavors should be the United States' prime enemy.

Just because other groups didn't perpetrate Sept. 11's infamy doesn't mean they weren't in favor of it.

Other SJSU students give speculation as to why the terrorism was aimed at us.

Some believe that as a nation we had this coming, by sticking our political and military nose in other nation's business.

Yet, no reason justifies this blow — the loss of thousands of innocent Americans.

Justification of this is a defense of terrorism, and is as evil as the act itself.

The United States undeniably has a long record of sins, national blunders, military bullying and hypocritical politics.

The Vietnam War was a black eye for the United States. The United States would also soon forget the secret wars, conducted discreetly because they were wrong, like Panama.

But to say that our nation in any way had this coming is absurd. It's un-American.

Try telling that to the families of the dead. Tell them that their sons, daughters and siblings deserved to die because of America's wrongs.

No two wrongs by the United States could ever make last Tuesday right.

It is true to say our government blew it in the intelligence and defense sectors. Perhaps over confidence blinded the eyes of those who are supposed protect us.

But, whether the U.S. government courted the most recent terrorist action, is unimportant.

Even if the United States did have this coming, it doesn't matter.

Should we say those who committed what President Bush called "acts of war" shouldn't be blamed?

And by this do we remain impotent in our response to such terrorism?

Andrew Wyllie, a columnist for the debate forum thefence.com reminded us of the past acts of terrorism in his recent article. He wrote that Sept. 11's was not the first, but should be the last.

"The Marine Barracks in Beirut. Pan Am flight 103. The World Trade Center. The Oklahoma City Federal Building. Khobar Towers. United States embassies in Kenya and Tanzania. All locations of terrorist activities carried out against Americans. Often these were government locations. Occasionally, civilians were involved: in the case of flight 103, precisely 269 were, 189 of whom were American."

The fact that most of those incidents are unknown to some Americans is proof that the U.S. is not doing enough to combat terrorism.

After the last 10 days Americans should know, terrorism is evil and those who commit terrorist actions must be eradicated.

In a letter to the editor of the Washington Post, Dana Honeycutt of San Diego, Calif. is a voice of Americans everywhere.

"The long-overdue, proper approach is to lay waste to all known terrorist training camps and, more important, to the governments that harbor them. Let the world's dictators know that this is the price they will pay for sheltering those who would attack the United States."
